The Alien Life

There was no question in Dan's mind that the drycleaners had shrunk his favourite turtle-neck.

Hi

When did illusion become reality?

Wasn't there a time, and recently, when efficiency and competence were considered the ideal? The loftiest laurels reserved for quiet ability.

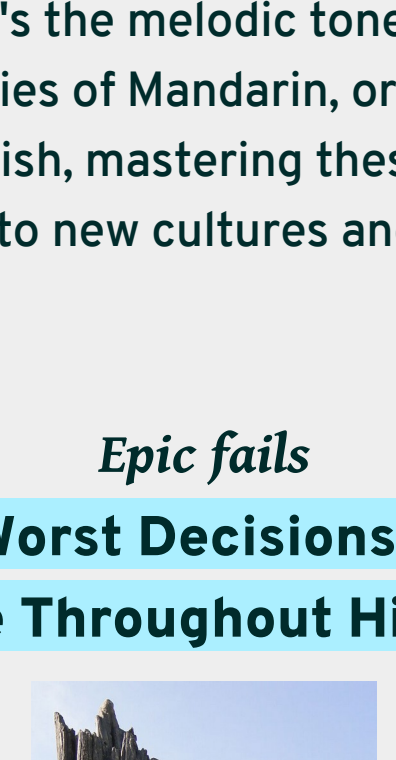

It was a bar set high that was aspired to. The considerable meaning of work and effort resulting in achievement. Experience valued above all.

Has this been replaced by the illusion of triumph? Knowing that it is a chimera being weighed and feted, and yet still gifted with worth. Why?

What merit has reality in a world that elevates and worships delusion. This new religion of the soothing semblance of reality, is dulling us as a whole.

Small World

The most spoken languages in the world

" Ever wondered what the most widely spoken languages are in the world? Although there are currently more than 7,000 languages, more than half of the world's population speak 23 of them only. Whether it's the melodic tones of Spanish, the rich intricacies of Mandarin, or the rhythmic cadence of English, mastering these top tongues will open doors to new cultures and opportunities. "

30 Of The Worst Decisions That People Made Throughout History

" No one is safe from making an occasional mistake here and there, and owning up and apologizing is usually more than enough to fix everything. However, there are those rare instances where people manage to mess up so bad, their terrible decisions make history. And today we have prepared you a handful of excellent examples. "

Big plays with small

Why are orcas suddenly ramming boats?

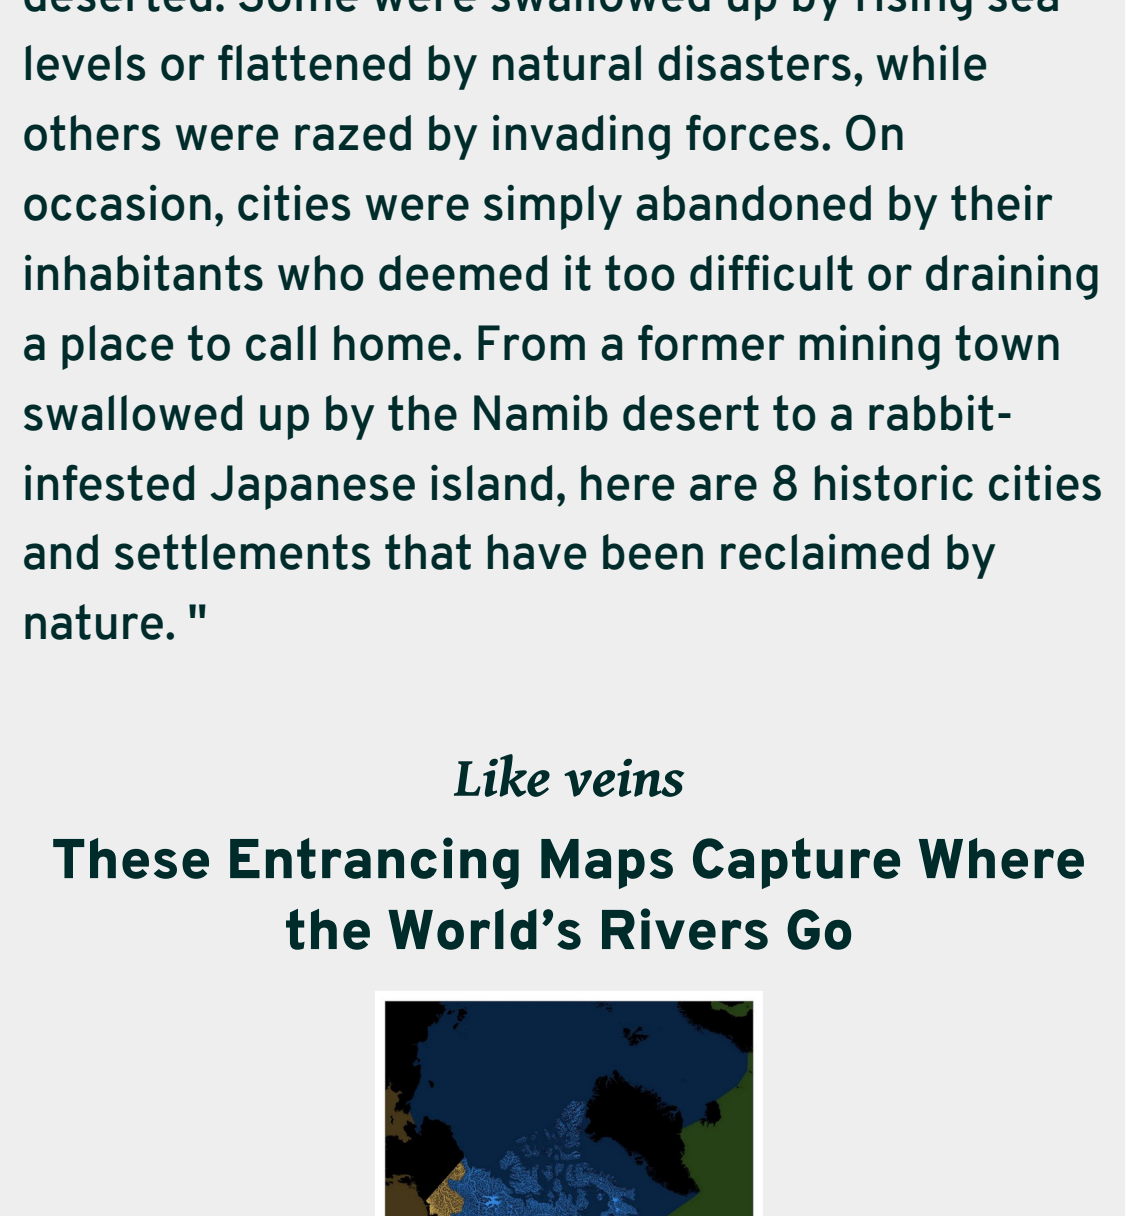

" Orcas are commonly known as killer whales but are actually part of the dolphin family, and have never been known to be aggressive towards humans in the wild. Since 2020, however, the strange new behaviour of a group of them living in the waters around the Iberian Peninsula, in south-western Europe, has been baffling sailors, scientists and now a global audience. The cetaceans appear to have invented a risky new game: It involves chasing sailboats and pushing the rudders, breaking them in the process. "

Striking Lost Cities and Structures Reclaimed by Nature

" Over the course of human history, countless thriving cities have been lost, destroyed or deserted. Some were swallowed up by rising sea levels or flattened by natural disasters, while others were razed by invading forces. On occasion, cities were simply abandoned by their inhabitants who deemed it too difficult or draining a place to call home. From a former mining town swallowed up by the Namib desert to a rabbit-infested Japanese island, here are 8 historic cities and settlements that have been reclaimed by nature. "

These Entrancing Maps Capture Where the World's Rivers Go

" The new maps show how interconnected the world's waterways are—how far-flung rivers from different continents eventually reach the same ocean expanse. The ocean boundaries themselves are also essentially human constructs. After all, the world's four named oceans are essentially one body of water—and one gigantic drainage basin on a planetary scale.
