The Alien Life

Bob couldn't help but feel that nature had provided him with inefficient tools.

Hi

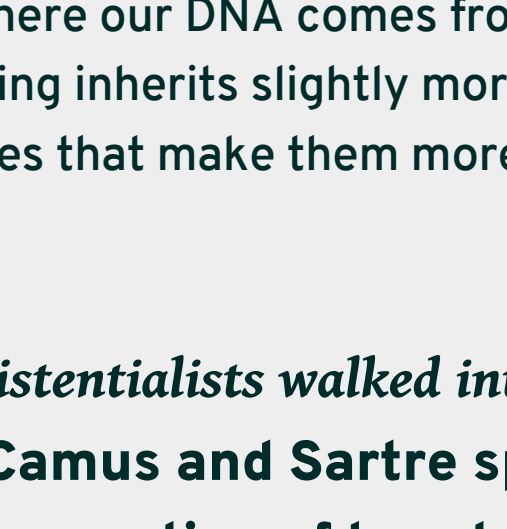

I have adventured where I didn't know I belonged.

It is not necessary to set the sky alight to adventure.

It is only necessary to go beyond your fears.

You came from Africa

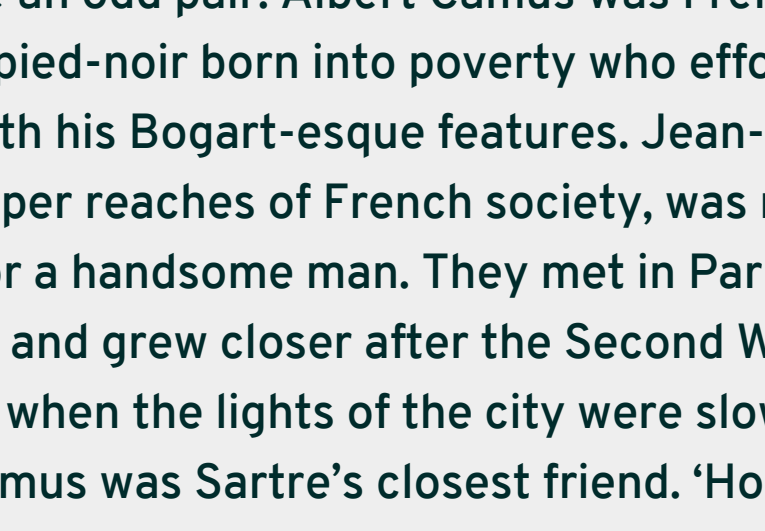

The limits of ancestry DNA tests, explained

" Human history is a messy, migratory affair, much too complicated to track simply using our DNA. And the exact percentages of where our DNA comes from may not matter either. If your sibling inherits slightly more Scandinavian DNA than you, does that make them more Scandinavian? No. "

How Camus and Sartre split up over the question of how to be free

" They were an odd pair. Albert Camus was French Algerian, a pied-noir born into poverty who effortlessly charmed with his Bogart-esque features. Jean-Paul Sartre, from the upper reaches of French society, was never mistaken for a handsome man. They met in Paris during the Occupation and grew closer after the Second World War. In those days, when the lights of the city were slowly turning back on, Camus was Sartre's closest friend. 'How we loved you then,' Sartre later wrote. "

Robot dentist can prep a tooth crown in 15 minutes

" It's unclear if enlisting large robots for dental procedures like fillings and crowns will make visits any more pleasant—if anything, it's easier to envision many patients canceling their appointments at such a possibility. Still, at least one company swears autonomous machines are destined for dentistry, and reportedly tested one on a human volunteer as proof. "

The Guinness Book of Records

The book of the odd is born

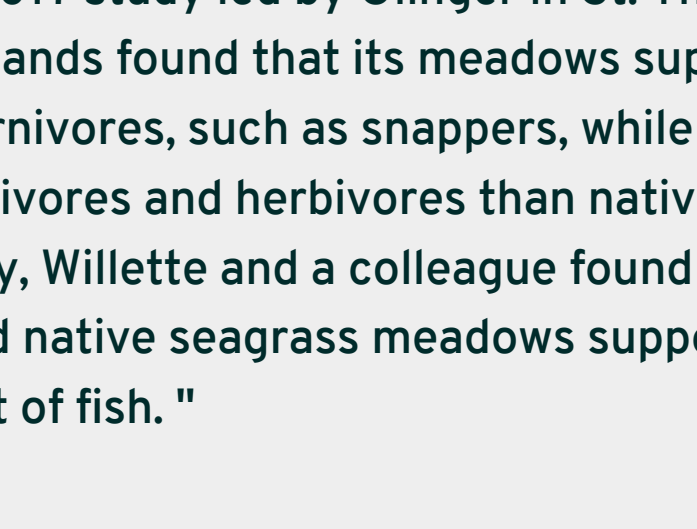

Wiki Rabbit Hole

" On 10 November 1951, Sir Hugh Beaver, then the managing director of the Guinness Breweries, went on a shooting party in the North Slob, by the River Slaney in County Wexford, Ireland. After missing a shot at a golden plover, he became involved in an argument over which was the fastest game bird in Europe, the golden plover or the red grouse (the plover is faster, but neither is the fastest game bird in Europe). That evening at Castlebridge House, he realised that it was impossible to confirm in reference books whether or not the golden plover was Europe's fastest game bird. Beaver knew that there must have been numerous other questions debated nightly among the public, but there was no book in the world with which to settle arguments about records. He realised then that a book supplying the answers to this sort of question might prove successful. "

The Seagrass Species That Is Not So Slowly Taking Over the World

" But it's not all bad news. Some other fish appreciate it, for instance. A 2017 study led by Olinger in St. Thomas in the U.S. Virgin Islands found that its meadows supported more nocturnal carnivores, such as snappers, while it had fewer daytime carnivores and herbivores than native grasses. In another study, Willette and a colleague found both Halophila and native seagrass meadows support about the same amount of fish. "

Chanel No 2: The many reasons why dogs love to roll in poo

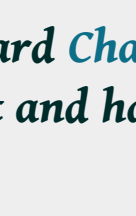

" Of course, it could be that the animals just enjoy rolling around in strong smells. One idea put forward by animal behaviour specialist Michael Fox in his 2007 book Dog Body, Dog Mind is that dogs might simply be collecting scents for pleasure, in the way humans dab on a spray of perfume. He suggests that a squirt of human perfume might also help to discourage a dog from seeking out unpleasant odours. "
